SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA PRESS EXCURSION.

The editors of the Southern California country press had their annual outing last week, and, with their families, descended in force upon San Diego, Coronado and Tia Juana, and even pervaded for a few happy hours the alluring precincts of La Jolla and Pacific Beach.

San Diego.

Dear old, delightful San Diego! Hopeful and hospitable as of old we knew you, you sit enthroned upon your gently sloping hills that front the bay of great delight, and sing paeans to the praise of all those praiseworthy things which bountiful nature and persistent human endeavor have blessed you with, and every mother's son and daughter of you joins in the chorus of that good old hymn with modern improvements:

"There is a land of pure delight,
Right here at home."

San Diego has that attribute which marks true greatness, a proper appreciation of self.

But she is not selfish in this matter; she wants everybody else to share with her this ecstatic state, and her people are the greatest advertisers on earth. Her real estate agents pour out an inundation of literature upon the visitor, and, of its kind, it is good. There is no necessity for getting out your note book, as the writer found the night of his arrival, when, upon asking an obviously pertinent question, he was told, "Oh, yes, you'll find out all about it in our folder!" And he did. San Diego claims 40,000 people; and that the population has doubled since 1900. This claim is evidently not far from correct, and the statement made by some irresponsible party, that there are only three people there—John D. Spreckels, Katherine Tingley and U. S. Grant—cannot possibly be true. We know something about this matter, for we met others; there was the reception committee and the members of the Chamber of Commerce, and the Mayor and a lot of live newspaper men. Oh, yes! there are forty thousand, all right, and every last one of them was exerting himself to give the visiting newspaper men the time of their lives, and they succeeded. We went over the city in the street cars without being called upon for tickets (the most novel experience of the trip); noted and admired the great concrete structure being erected by U. S. Grant on the site of the famous old Horton House; also the Normal School; also looked over the brink into the Mission Valley—a pretty picture, with the oldest mission in California just visible in the background; saw and spoke familiarly with ostriches at the ostrich farm, and then were taken over the bay to visit at Point Loma.

The Raja Yoga School of Madame Tingley.

An envious foe, hid from our view

what high authorities declare to be one of the most beautiful scenes in the world. But we saw the temple, and it is beautiful. We entered, two hundred strong, in bunches of 18 or 20 at a time (for things go by system there, so that there was no crowding within the sacred precincts. A glass dome, beautifully tinted, covers the lecture room, the walls of which are fine specimens of the painter's art, the different shades of purple prevailing. Soft, sweet strains of music by unseen performers greeted our entrance. Then an orchestra, led by a sixteen-year-old boy, discoursed most sweet, harmonious sound. Probably two hundred children were present; they and all the female inmates of the institution garbed in white. The males were attired in neat uniforms. There was excellent music (instrumental), recitations by the pupils, of which we speak elsewhere, and a speech of welcome, laudatory of theosophy, by the High Priestess, Katherine Tingley, to whom all the inmates are apparently most loyally attached, and to whom alone the success of the institution is due. The madame was gorgeously robed in silken white, a face framed in hair of blackest blackness, strong and masterful. The atmosphere of the institution suggests several things, among them peace, precision, power and possibly repression. We were informed that there are 1500 applications for places for children in the school, that there is no fixed rate of tuition, nor any iron-clad rule in regard to entrance; that Madame Tingley frequently refuses to admit the children of wealthy patrons in order to give place to poor children whom she is interested in. And remembering the faces of a large majority of the children we saw, we can believe this, for they have not the appearance of being the offspring of wealthy parents, but rather the reverse. There are occasional exceptions, of course, there being a few children, particularly among the boys, who bear the impress of aristocrats.

Saturday evening the editors banqueted at the Coronado. The bill of fare was a credit to that great canteen, and when thoroughly edited, was followed by a flow of oratory, some of which was quite up to the standard; plenty of it and then some more.

Tia Juana.

All tenderfeet spying out the country around San Diego make the trip over the border to see the International Monument, and witness a bull fight if possible. We saw both, the monument being by far the more impressive and interesting. The trouble about the bull fights is that they kill nothing but bulls and time. We are told that men and women go there every Sunday from San Diego to see this "sport." The people of San Diego object to this, and have held mass meetings to protest against it; they even want the President to interfere.

It seems to us that if we lived in San Diego, we should not object to this class of people going over the line on Sundays to see a bull fight; we should only object to their coming back.

Tia Juana is about as nearly nothing as a place can be to get on the map. We didn't pay anything to go there, and came back feeling that we were swindled; but our hosts meant it kindly. They knew we wanted to go.

On Monday we went over the bay to Fort Rosecrans, at the entrance to the harbor. About two hundred soldiers are located here, and a battery consisting of four ten-inch guns. The fort is not imposing, as its front is the natural earth of the hillside, but viewed from the rear it is seen to be perfectly secure from any frontal attack, as it would afford absolutely no target for an enemy's guns. The great guns are mounted on disappearing carriages, which work automatically, the force of the recoil bringing the gun down from the firing position to a position of security. The fort and the guns, however, are not the main dependence for defense. The entrance to the harbor is closed by mines which are kept in readiness to be put in position at any time, and can be arranged to be fired by contact with a vessel, or by electricity from the shore.

On Sunday the party was taken to La Jolla and Pacific Beach. At the latter place the Folsom brothers, of Hotel Balboa, entertained the visitors with a most superb and bounteous luncheon, and made them feel perfectly at home for three hours in their hospitable establishment. The party was lodged during their visit at Tent City, Coronado, probably the most nearly perfect in all the requisites of comfort, of that class of resorts, the world over.

San Diego is rejoicing in the acquisition of a water supply which they claim is ample to supply their most extravagant requirements. It is storm water brought down from the mountains during the season of storms, held back in an immense dam, aerated and filtered, and sold to the city on a ten-year lease for four cents per thousand gallons. The arrangement seems to be very satisfactory to both parties, and the quality of the water is undoubtedly excellent.

Another thing that San Diegans are rejoicing over is the fact that at last the long-hoped-for road to Yuma is actually being built, and John D. Spreckels is the builder, and again the arrangement seems to suit everybody. As an evidence of Mr. Spreckels' generosity, it is said that when he undertook the work, he refunded to individual contributors the $40,000 which they had raised to pay for the preliminary survey. They were talking of this road when we first visited San Diego 29 years ago, and it is quite possible that it will do for the city all that its enthusiastic promoters promise.

Opening of the Country Club

The Glendale Country Club house, of which we published a description last week, was formally opened July 4th. From 2 o'clock until 4 p. m. the house was thrown open to the public, the members and ladies of their families acting as a reception committee to receive the guests, of whom a large number were present during the afternoon to admire the buildings and grounds and to partake of the hospitality of the club.

Mr. L. C. Brand received the visitors, giving to all a cordial welcome, being assisted by Messrs. Dan Campbell, G. T. Holman, R. C. Sternberg, D. Griswold, E. W. Richardson, Jesse Stine and the club members generally who happened to be present from time to time.

The punch bowl in the dining room was filled and refilled with delicious ice-cold lemonade, and as Mr. Holman presided over it, it is scarcely necessary to say that visitors were treated both well and often.

The club house has been tastefully furnished and is a most attractive place both inside and out, and we have no doubt but that it will be a resort of great popularity and become one of Glendale's most attractive features.

CITY TRUSTEES.

The Fourth of July atmosphere prevented there being a quorum at the trustees' meeting Wednesday night, and as a consequence there was nothing doing.

July the Fourth

Now the small boys joy galore,
Ebullutes as oft before,
While he fires the snappy cracker
And the detonating bomb.
Now with manly pride he swells
When he opens his mouth and yells
And the powder how it smells—
While the girls chew gum!

Oh, you sweltering old July,
We would gladly pass you by
But for the boys.

Let them shoot and celebrate,
Let us hope 'twill educate—
All this noise!

And if the girls would rather try
To fire a rocket at the sky
Than chew and chew!
Let them have the rocket quick,
Fuse and match and also stick,
Now, girls—do!

And Again Taft

Mr. William H. Taft, whom we nominated for president last January, has been nominated by a good many people since, and we believe that the people generally will come around to our point of view. At any rate, he is in the front rank of possibilities by common consent, and we believe that the admirers of Roosevelt are gradually coming to the conclusion that possibly after all, his friends should not stultify him by attempting to make him run when he has so emphatically said that he will not.

The Good Roads Commission

We were led to understand by the Good Roads Committee, that the Supervisors had promised to appoint, as the members of the commission, three men from a list submitted by the committee. We presume they did not actually promise to do this, although encouraging the committee to think they would do so. This is the sort of thing that politicians are adepts in. That the selections made were dictated by political motives, is made very apparent by the appointment of Mr. Martin C. Marsh as a member of the committee.

It is alleged that Mr. Marsh was thrown in to pay Mr. Eldridge's political debts, Mr. Marsh being an old-fashioned Democrat who aided his Republican friend to win the superintendency.

To the Public

We deplore the necessity of putting into the News matter personal to ourselves, but the assertions made in last week's Independent are so outrageously false, that it is due the community as well as ourselves that a reply should be made.

The firm of Riggs & McClure dissolved partnership on September 30th last. Very shortly after this date Mr. Riggs did make some inquiry of four or five Glendale business men as to the possibilities of another paper. Altho they nearly all expressed themselves as dissatisfied with the paper as conducted by Mr. McClure, yet they did not encourage the idea of starting another, and the matter was dropped, only to be revived by Mr. McClure in the columns of the Independent, as an excuse for his own dishonorable action when, after having sold to Riggs & Sherer, his "Good Will," he started another paper in the endeavor to steal away from them the property he had sold.

There is not the shadow of foundation for the assertion that "Before McClure bought Riggs' interest, Riggs & Sherer had planned to get McClure's interest" or for the further statement that "Riggs & Sherer had made the ultimatum for McClure to sell to them or they would start another paper." The question of starting another paper was not even discussed between Messrs. Riggs and Sherer, and in making the last statement quoted, the editor of the Independent states that which he knows to be ridiculously false, without a shadow of extenuation or excuse.

About Labor Unions

The Huntington Beach News pays this paper the compliment of copying two articles from our columns of recent date on the situation in San Francisco. It showed good judgment; they are good reading. One was from an esteemed correspondent who wrote from San Francisco, where he spent a day or two in passing northward. He had not seen any of the violent scenes, connected with the street car strike, but did not deny that there had been such, and he took occasion to speak well of some members of the labor unions whom he had met.

In the same issue we had an editorial condemning the lawless acts in connection with the strike and saying in effect that the condition there was a disgrace to a free country.

The Huntington Beach paper publishes the articles side by side, and apparently imagines that it is proving our inconsistency. We do not admit this for a moment. It may appear as a fact to the biased vision of the editor who sees nothing but good in unionism, and who strikes out blindly at everything that does not wear a union label. Our editorial was not contradictory in any particular of the remarks of our correspondent. He "grasped the hand and looked into the honest eyes of union laborers." Without much of an effort he might have "grasped the hand and looked into the honest eyes of San Francisco capitalists." But, all the same, had he wanted to ride in a street car to a certain part of the city of San Francisco, he would have found that it was impossible to do so. And he would have found that no cars were running because striking employees and their sympathizers, not being able to have things just as they wanted them, would not permit it!

Our friend with labor union proclivities will say that the people who owned the car lines wanted their way also. Very true; but there is this vital distinction: the people owning the car lines wanted their way WITH THEIR OWN PROPERTY; the strikers wanted their way with property belonging to somebody else! Possibly the way of neither the one nor the other was entirely right, but the people at large would undoubtedly have fared better had the car company had its way, rather than the reverse.

The idea we wish to emphasize, however, is this: Nobody that we know of, no newspaper that we know of, is fighting union labor "per se," as the lawyers say (in itself,) but they are fighting, and ought to fight, the arrogant demands of leaders "drest in a little brief authority," whose actions are an injury to all classes and whose methods are too frequently outside the pale of the law.

As to all the acts of outlawry committed in time of strike being by "sympathizers" only, the assertion is untrue; but if it is true, it is pertinent to ask why the criminal element of society always gives its sympathies to the same side in these contests? There is something wrong in the actions of any body of men if they can always depend upon the sympathy of the criminal class. And here at once we may expect to be reported as saying that "the sympathizers of striking laborers are criminals," for with just such misrepresentation is the antagonistic feeling between the classes kept alive.

It should be unnecessary to say that sympathizers are found in all classes, but only in the criminal class is the feeling unanimous. It should be unnecessary to say that many members of labor unions are good honest men and good citizens; in fact that this applies to a large majority of them. Unionism is an edged tool; it is excellent in theory; it has done much good in practice; but labor unionism recently has too many crimes to answer for to be deserving of unqualified support from good citizens.

There is too much talk about capital and labor; let us disintegrate the classes in forming our opinions and think rather of the members as men. A capitalist is neither angel nor devil because he is a capitalist, neither does being a laborer guarantee admission at the Pearly Gates nor condemn a man to regions torrid.

A GREAT WATER PROJECT.

As the people of our section are all interested in matters pertaining to water, and as there may be those who think that the Owens river project is the greatest of the kind in history, it may be interesting to know something of the stupendous undertaking entered upon by the city of New York. The following facts are obtained from a recent issue of the New York Times: The work contemplated consists of bringing down from the valleys of the Catskills, a flow of water which, it is estimated, will furnish half a billion gallons daily. It will be brought down in an aqueduct 150 miles in length. The estimated cost is $161,000,000, twenty millions more than the estimated cost of the Panama canal. It will not be completed until 1930. It will be seen by the above statement that this is one of the most gigantic undertakings in history. And a glance at some of the details, enables one to better comprehend its greatness. The streams of the Catskill valleys will have their waters impounded in a reservoir 12 miles in length and from a mile and a half to two miles in width. On the proposed site of this reservoir which is in the Esopus valley, there are at present eight or ten villages with a population of 3000 people. 15,000 acres of land there will be to be condemned, and a thousand buildings demolished or removed. It is estimated that the cost of converting this valley into a lake, will be $29,000,000 and that part of the work will consume eight years' time.

The aqueduct will be as large as a railway tunnel, must dip under several streams and be sunk several hundred feet deep to pass under the bed of the Hudson, the East river and the Narrows. The most difficult crossing will be that of the Hudson at Storm King, where it may be necessary to go down a thousand feet in order to create a huge syphon through which the waters of the aqueduct may pass. Another great problem in connection with the project, is the filtration of the water to secure its purity; this is to be solved by the creation of a filtration plant at Scarsdale, which will cost $17,000,000. All of the water will flow through a layer of sand two feet thick, beneath which will be pebbles, then stones of larger size with a system of perforated drain pipes to carry off the purified water. The necessity for such a work is shown in the fact that the present population of Greater New York is over four millions and it is estimated that it will be seven millions in 1930.

A LITTLE ASTROLOGY.

When the weather is "unusual" and we can't keep our neighbor's chickens out of the garden, and the mistress of the manse is house cleaning, and the world going wrong generally, we turn to our old friend, Dr. McDonald, the Astrological Almanac man, to find out the whyness of it all.

And he never fails us. He can answer all the questions which have puzzled philosophers throughout the ages and he does it so easily. We are sure, although he does not make any such claim, that he can answer the most intricate questions imaginable, with both hands tied behind his back; he is simply a wonder! And he can prophesy, too. He says it is a supernatural gift, but he promises to reveal it all if you will buy his book at one dollar per. We notice that there is to be a serious mix-up between England and the United States from 1908 to 1911, and the cheerful assurance is given that "the war between Russia and Japan will be child's play compared to it." We are glad to know this; we have been suspecting King Edward for some time past; it was only last week that we saw an Englishman on the street. He had his mouth open and was apparently just taking in the country, but now we are assured that he was a spy in disguise and that the attempt to conceal his features by opening his mouth, was only a ruse.

One might suppose that a war with England would be trouble enough for one summer or two, but in order to give his patrons the worth of their money the prophet also promises a famine and a pestilence at the same time. But it's rather discouraging to read about these things, so we turn gladly to actual facts. Here we learn that flower seeds planted when there is a rainbow in the sky will bear rainbow tinted flowers! Houses shingled in the new moon will have leaky roofs; always wait for an older moon when you begin a job of shingling. If you can only restrain your impatience and wait until the moon gets old, enough you won't need any roof. This is valuable to know. Do not graft trees while the moon is waning; it is more profitable to graft somebody else.

But we do not wish to crowd too many facts into this brief article. The above is a sample of what a good, healthy astrologist is capable of doing when he gets down to business.

"With every tick of the clock temperance makes a pauper. It causes one thousand deaths every day, three hundred cases of insanity, thirteen thousand fights, the beating of one thousand seven hundred children, besides doing double duty on holidays."

A physician in charge of a large sanitarium says that three-fifths of all the men who come to the institution within a year to be cured of opium, morphine or cocaine habit have been cigaret smokers and plead as their only excuse the need of a stronger stimulant.

There is good protection by law for our game and fish, but not for our people, when Christian men pray, work and vote for prohibition, we shall have it. When moral and Christian sentiment is crystallized at the ballot box the shackles will fall from American drunkards, "God speed the day."

Human activities can all be classed under three heads, Business, Charity, Crime. Business is characterized by service and profit. Charity, service without profit, and Crime, profit without service. The man who has temperance principles should not keep them in the dark.

A little boy seeing a man stagger on the street, exclaimed, "Oh, mamma, see how that man stutters with his feet!"

Lincoln's Total-Abstinence Pledge.

Whereas, the use of alcoholic liquor as a beverage is productive of pauperism, degeneration and crime, and believing it to be our duty to discourage that which produces more evil than good, we therefore, pledge ourselves to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. Conclusive proof has been found that this pledge was not only signed and advocated by Mr. Lincoln, but actually composed by him.

GENEROUSLY FORGIVEN.

We have just called on the Glendale News to say that the loquacious editor of the Valley Independent is most generously forgiven for wholly misinterpreting my statement of things "needed" in Glendale, which statement was to the effect that the only thing not apparently demanded by any sufficient precedent was the Valley Independent. Even the doctor and the undertaker are useful in their places, and sometimes needed, as was also the poor old "dinky" railway, which we all sincerely mourn. The only seeming superfluity we are burdened with in our enterprising little city is an extra news vendor.

D. W. HUNT.

THE TRAINING OF CHILDREN.

It is an indisputable fact that a large proportion of children brought into the world are handicapped through life by a lack of proper training during the years of childhood. They grow up in ignorance of their own nature and of their divine possibilities. They are not able to properly educate themselves, because they do not know how, and because in many cases the best energies of their young lives are devoted to overcoming wrong tendencies which should have been eradicated in childhood. The successful orchardist realizes the necessity for pruning and directing the growth of the young tree, and acts according to his knowledge, and it is easy for him to do so because he is dealing with a non-resisting subject. But the same orchardist will quite possibly, in the case of his own children, allow "Nature to take its course," because the training is a matter of difficulty. We are led to give expression to these ideas as prefatory to a brief reference to an institution visited by us a few days ago at Point Loma, Cal. And if there be something of a prejudice existing in the minds of some of our readers against the Raja Yoga school of Madame Tingley we would remind them of the ancient question, "Can any good come out of Nazareth?" and of the reply, "Come and see." Bear in mind that we are not attempting to pass judgment upon theosophy or upon the teachings of things ethical or occult in vogue at Madame Tingley's institution, for of these we know nothing. But this is what we saw: Two hundred children in age ranging from 2 to 17 years. Out of these two hundred, a splendid orchestra of twenty-five performers, led by a boy of 16, discoursed most eloquent music. An address of welcome delivered by another boy, witty, eloquent and delivered in perfect simple style. Questions answered by him in a manner showing the off-hand readiness of the experienced orator familiar with his subject. There were solos, duets, quartettes, instrumental and vocal, and then the class exercises by the scholars. The reading was the best we have heard in any school. Two and three-year-old children read from their primers with perfect enunciation and correctness, and of the reading by scholars in higher grades, the same may be said. The most wonderful performance, however, was by a large class of children four and five years of age. They gave exhibitions of proficiency in geography, history, grammar and mental arithmetic, which showed clearly that whether the "Ancient Mysteries" are taught at the Point Loma school or not, the modern elements of an education are certainly not forgotten. The mental performances of these children were most remarkable. The five-year-old youngsters answered off-hand, as soon as the questions were asked, such intricate questions as, "How much is 3 times 6, plus 7, minus 2, multiplied by 9, added to the square of 16?" There were probably not more than two or three in the audience of three hundred present whose mature minds worked nimbly enough to enable them to verify the answer by the time it was given. The same class of children showed their familiarity with the multiplication table, and in orthography were capable of spelling three-syllabled words either forward or backward. There were doubters among our company, but we are satisfied that it was a genuine exhibition of the power of the human mind when it has learned the value of concentration and can apply it. And the fact that these children can master this art at such a tender age opens up a vista of limitless possibilities along the line of human achievement, so vast that we do not wonder that the thing which can be accounted for so reasonably and logically should be looked upon by a portion of our contemporaries as mystical and uncanny. We are told that the children devoted only four hours per day to study; that they are not punished, but are encouraged by discriminating kindness and love. And the appearance of the teacher, a rather lovely young woman, charmingly gowned in white, as were all the visible members of the household, indicated great possibilities in that direction. We believe that there can be found at the Raja Yoga school many ideas of value in regard to the training of the young.

In popular estimation the most interesting fact about the moon is her beautiful light, and in her character as a luminary, poet and painter have vied with each other in extolling her.

When the silver crescent first appears in the western sky, shortly after sunset, we speak of it as the "new moon." It is then, however, several days old. The new moon is invisible, and coincides with the presentation of the moon's dark face to the earth; and at that time the moon is between the earth and the sun. In a few days, however, when the moon has advanced along a portion of her orbit round the earth, a corresponding portion of her illuminated surface becomes visible to us. When she is one-quarter way round, one-half of her surface is visible, and she is said to be in her first quarter. In another week she has got half way round, so that she is on the other side of the earth, away from the sun. She rises at the time of sunset, the whole of the face turned to the earth is illuminated; it is "full moon." The last quarter comes when the moon has accomplished three-fourths of her monthly journey, and only one-half her surface is visible—the half which was invisible at first quarter—and so on to new moon again.

On account of the inclination of the moon's orbit to that of the earth, the sun, moon and earth are rarely exactly in line at new or full moon. When, however, this coincidence occurs, we have the interesting phenomena of solar and lunar eclipses. An eclipse of the sun occurs when the dark body of the moon interposes between us and the central orb, becoming total or annular, when the two bodies are in the same straight line from the earth. In a total eclipse of the sun, the latter is, of course, entirely obscured, but on account of the varying distances of the sun and moon from the earth, and from each other, the visible disc of the moon at the time of eclipse is sometimes smaller than that of the sun. If the moon appears the larger, it will evidently cover up the whole of the sun; but if it is smaller, a beautiful ring of sunlight will be seen round the dark body of the moon. This is called an annular eclipse, and is of comparatively rare occurrence. An eclipse of the sun can only take place at or near the time of new moon. An eclipse of the moon can only occur at or near the time of full moon, when the moon is farthest from the sun, and is caused by the moon passing through the shadow of the earth as the latter comes between the sun and the moon.

The certainty with which these phenomena can be predicted, and the exact agreement between prediction and observed event, leave no room for doubt that our calculations of the dimensions, distances and velocities of the sun, earth, moon and other celestial bodies are correct, and, indeed, it is asserted that the distance between the earth and the moon is known with greater mathematical exactness than that between, say, New York and San Francisco, or any other long distance on the surface of the earth.

A most important service rendered by the moon to mankind is the assistance she affords him in the difficult problem of determination of longitude, enabling the mariner to guide his ship in certainty and safety over the trackless ocean. Every ship, of course, carries a chronometer, sometimes several, but chronometers are not always to be relied upon. So it is necessary to have recourse to the heavenly bodies to check the timekeeper, and the moon is that body which best fulfills the requirements of the case.

It is, however, as the chief producer of the tides that we should place the highest value on the services of the moon. While the sun keeps the atmosphere in constant and healthy circulation by the agency of the winds, the moon performs an analogous service to the waters of the seas, and the rivers that flow into them. Without the moon's aid as a mighty scavenger, our shores, where rivers terminate, would become stagnant deltas of fatal corruption. Such dire calamity as would result from this condition is happily averted by our mighty and ever-active sanitary commissioner, the moon.

Reception to Mr. and Mrs. Knight

A reception was given last Wednesday evening at the residence of Rev. S. L. Ward by the Ladies' Aid Society and the Presbyterian Brotherhood to Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Knight, who are about to leave Glendale for Portland, Ore. The evening was pleasantly spent in an informal manner. Light refreshments were served, including refreshing cool drinks. About thirty were present.

Mr. and Mrs. Knight have been active workers in the Presbyterian church and in its auxiliary societies, and will be greatly missed. They intend to spend a considerable portion of the summer camping out before settling down in their new home.

GLORIOUS FOURTH.

The Fourth of July was truly as well as loyally celebrated here. Young America, with his firecracker, torpedo and toy cannon, was very much in evidence the entire twenty-four hours. In fact, some of the youngsters worked overtime, as they endeavored to crowd thirty-six hours of fun into the twenty-four.

MISS LUELLA MOORE ENTERTAINS.

Miss Luella Moore charmingly entertained a coterie of her school girl friends at her home on Glendale avenue Wednesday afternoon. Music and games furnished a pleasing diversion and later the guests repaired to the large, roomy kitchen, where each demonstrated her art at making candy. A dainty buffet luncheon was served. The guests accepting the hospitality of Miss Moore were Misses Enid Watson, Lillian Ellias, Lola Pratt, Smiley Ellias, Virginia Allen, Birdie Shropshire, Elizabeth Foss, Pearl Goode, Winifred Sadler, Lenora Clarke and Isabella Smith.

Hall, when they will present with the assistance of fifty prominent society people of Tropico, Glendale and Whittier, the comedy entitled "The Union Station." Queer costumes will be worn, local "hits" given, and a most amusing program is promised. One of the principal features will be the chorus, "Cheyenne," sung by eight young girls in cowboy costume. There is no little conjecture as to who will represent Sis Hopkins, who remains on the stage the entire evening. Uncle Josh arrives early and remains late, as does Mrs. Henpeck and Mrs. Guttinsky.

The tickets are selling rapidly, and a large audience is promised.

FIVE HUNDRED CLUB ENTERTAINED.

Mr. and Mrs. Wesley H. Bullis very delightfully entertained the Five Hundred Card Club at their home on Central avenue, Saturday evening. Following an interesting game at cards, the guests assembled in the dining room and there enjoyed a course dinner, replete in all its appointments. This was also the motif for celebrating the anniversary of one of the club members, Mrs. W. A. Thompson. Dainty little place cards with pink carnations were arranged, while a large bowl of pink and white roses graced the table. Mrs. Thompson occupied a chair elaborately decorated with pink dahlias and trailing minca. Mrs. Thompson recovered sufficiently from her surprise to be able to cut the large birthday cake, which was encircled with a wreath of dainty pink rosebuds surrounding a large question mark of pink bristol board. A handsome cut-glass dish was presented Mrs. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Bullis entertained Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Hal H. Dav-

In the Web-foot Country

Coos Bay, Ore., June, 1907.

Editor News:—My stay in this section, and trip to the Northwest, is shortened by disquieting news from home—of the ill health of my wife. I am taking the first ship out of the harbor for home. Two weeks for the exchange of letters with this place, than which there is no other of its like, is rather trying on the nerves. Perhaps there is no other place this side of the Arctic regions more out of the way than this, especially in the winter season. Dependence for mail is on the Roseburg stage line, which for several months of the year fails utterly. Hence, with a brief summary of my observations, I will hie me hence.

Fifty or more years ago the "Lo!" family was numerous hereabouts. They were "hostiles," and legends of bloody encounters with them survive in numbers and serve to thrill the camps and cabins of the woodsmen with their recital. Not a vestige other of these gentlemen without hats remains, save that the fishing and hunting are about as they left them. Indeed, they have been improved, rather than otherwise, by the inroads upon the forest of the lumbermen—succeeded almost universally by a dense "second growth." Occasionally there is a bare hillside, the result of persistent dynamiting, grubbing and burning. As a rule, after the removal of the merchantable timber, nature has been left to its own marvelous moods of recuperation.

The streams remain, to all appearances, much the same, in volume and purity, as they were found by the frontiersman of '48. The water of the mountain streams from which I drank had the taste of "snow water," very much as it lingers on my lips from my school days at the foot of the Catskills in York State.

By the way, I take it that the county forming the northernmost portion of New Hampshire, on the Connecticut river, and bordering on Canada, is the name-sake of this, and that the two regions are not unlike in features of mountain, forest and stream, except that, in the matter of "style and finish," this is far the grandest.

I have neither the time nor space to enter upon the geological history of the region, full of wonder and fascinating interest though it is. In ages past, and long before the Roosevelt edict against the practice of "merging" went forth, there was witnessed here a mighty merging of the Coast and Cascade ranges of mountains, attended with vast upheavals within the area of which the Coos Bay region is a part. It is doubtful if the belief is general with the people here that the so-called "benches" of their mountain-sides or hill-sides are no other than ancient sea-beaches. But so it seems. The tusks of the mastodon were unearthed at Coquille a few years since. Sandstone is predominant in all parts, sandstone and shale. From these come the gold-bearing black sands, by the action of streams of water and their disintegrating effect—for which this region is famous—having their origin, as indications clearly demonstrate, in the Klamath mountains, in the summits of which the streams that drain the domain have their source. On the sea-coast east and southeast of Marshfield these black sands occur. At Whisky Run, in that vicinity, ten years ago three men took from a "placer" there at the rate of $100 a day for some little time.

The south fork of the Coquille river, which drains the southern area of Coos county, rises in the Rogue River mountains, a spur of the Klamath mountains, and the mountainous section to the northward. The latter includes the "placer mining" region which Poverty Gulch has made famous. Also the quartz and placers of Salmon mountain, in which our old mining friend, Milner, of Los Angeles, is now operating.

That all this vast area, extending from the eastern crest of the Klamath mountains to the sea, drained by the Umpqua, the Coquille and the Rogue, bears an auriferous burden of black sand, is well known. Deposits of the precious stuff have been found and successfully worked along the coast from Gold Beach to Arago Light, and from the jutting plains of wind-swept Blanco up the Sixes river indefinitely into the bold peaks of Klamath.

Time and space forbid further excursions into this wide field of gold, coal and timber. Suffice it to say that it is all there, in "paying quantities," and each attracting wide attention—coal and timber the widest—offering capital and labor fields of opportunity of unusual extent and value. Fields in which capital has been busy for years, especially in timber, nearly all of which is pretty thoroughly monopolized, very little, if any, remaining under government control. Just now people here are very much exercised over the continued withholding from market, occupation and development of a government grant of some 90,000 acres of as fine timber as exists, for a "wagon road from Roseburg to Coos Bay," now in the grip of the Southern Oregon Company, a corporation of wealthy non-resident landlords.

The act of Congress making the grant was passed March 3, 1869. By its terms the lands were to be sold in parcels of not exceeding 160 acres to any one person, and at not exceeding $2.50 per acre. The terms have been entirely ignored. An attempt is now being made in the courts to enforce them. The state was made the trustee of the grant, and it looks very much as if the state has violated its trust. The scramble for a foothold possession in the great grant has already begun.

It will be apparent to every one that there is a vast field of employment here for labor of every class, skilled and unskilled. The promise, however, that $10 will go as far here as $100 in Los Angeles is incapable of fulfillment.

As to values in town or city property, that is a question upon which I will not now venture, except to say that once your lot is cleared of trees and stumps, graded and put into a condition to build on, it is apt to be quite an expensive affair. One thing I noticed was that the size of town lots was of an average of 25 feet by 100 feet. But this is a case where the smaller your lot, the better you are off, when you take into account the cost of clearing it—Orchardizing it, a la Harry, with dynamite.

Not the least promising opportunities for enterprise on the bay is the fish and oyster business. On the south fork of Coos river is an extensive hatchery, from which a few days ago were liberated millions of young salmon. Finally, this is the angler's paradise. Very truly,
N. C. BURCH.

A PIONEER.

If any one was asked to name the resident of our valley who has known it longest, we imagine that but few would think of naming Mr. Abel L. French, of Lomita Park. Yet Mr. French set eyes upon it as long ago as 1853. Possibly no one else residing in the valley can make the same claim and we doubt if anyone else lives unless native born, who can say it. Mr. French, a mere boy, left his home in Ohio in 1852 bound for California. He had no means, was alone and had no definite plan of procedure, only he was determined to get there. He worked his way from one point to another until he reached Independence, Mo., where he was fortunate enough to get in with a party who were preparing to cross the plains, driving a herd of 350 cows and other live stock. The journey overland occupied six months. Arriving in California Mr. French stopped at Hangtown (Placerville) in what is now Eldorado County, although at that time the counties were not established. He remained there a short time only and 1853 found him in Los Angeles from which point he drove cattle northward through the state passing through the San Fernando valley. In March, 1855, he started home by water, crossing the isthmus on the first railroad train that ran over the then newly completed road. The cars were connected with the engine by a rope and the journey was a rather adventurous one. Mr. French arrived at his home in Ohio just three years to a day from the time he left, but the wanderlust was in his blood and it soon led him to seek again the Eldorado of the Pacific. Even now he is planning for another prospecting expedition.

FRANCIS MURPHY.

Francis Murphy has passed on from his pilgrimage in this little world, after having made in it a record of which men are and angels must be proud. He was an uplifter of humanity, not by any wholesale theoretical system, which has ever failed, but by the personal contact of man with man, aiding the fallen always by the uplift of his own strong spirit, appealing to the Divine within them with a wonderful success. His serene soul has doubtless passed on to higher flights, and his living spirit will continue to be an inspiration to all those who remember his hearty hand-clasp and the music of his cheery "God bless you."
